Columbus Tustin Middle School: Flying Leathernecks Essay

Helen Keller was both blind and deaf. Helen Keller was born on June 27, 1880, in Tuscumbia, Alabama. She developed an illness that left her deaf and blind when she was 19 months old. She was famous for overcoming the limitations of blindness and deafness. Anne Sullivan was Helen Keller's teacher and mentor. Anne Sullivan taught Helen Keller to speak and spell letters. Helen Keller inspires me with her courage to learn. I admire Helen Keller for her amazing achievements and dedication to her learnings. I want to emulate Helen Keller the same way she honored and committed to her career.

To begin, Helen Keller has inspired me because of her courage to learn. For example, I am inspired by Helen Keller because of her courage to learn the alphabet and to speak, even though she was deaf and blind. She was also taught to read braille by Anne Sullivan. Anne Sullivan helped Helen Keller by doing tactile braille and signing it on her palm. Her commitment to learning has influenced me that if she could do anything such as be taught to speak or read braille even if she was deaf and blind, I could learn what I put my mind to. All in all, Helen Keller had much courage to do what she put her mind to such as reading braille, learning sign language, and learning how to speak.

Next, I admire Helen Keller because of her achievements. She was the first person with deaf and blindness to graduate from college. Another reason is because she became a world-famous speaker and author. She was an advocate for people with disabilities. She gave many motivational speeches. Overall, Helen Keller had graduated from college even though she was both deaf and blind. She has many admirers around the world who have learned from her example and want to emulate her.

Furthermore, I would like to emulate Helen Keller because of her commitment to her job. After she graduated, she began working to help other people who are deaf and/or blind. She used her education to help others with disabilities. I want to emulate Helen Keller in her behavior and put dedication to my learnings and help people like her. Ultimately, she supported people in their journeys of their lives. She put much effort and commitment into her work.

In conclusion, Helen Keller has inspired me by having courage to do what people said she could not do. I admire Helen Keller because of her honor and hard work to her learnings. Helen Keller has inspired me with her leadership, and her commitment to her job. Helen Keller was an inspirational, admirable, and hard working person. She has helped many people with disabilities. She went through challenging obstacles throughout her life. She became a leader for several people. Her accomplishments have inspired many people, including me. Helen Keller was an important person throughout history, who has been a positive influence and hero around the world.
